

Writing for an Audience

A picture may be worth a thousand words, but do you have the words to create a picture for your reader?

Your audience will likely respond to a reader-friendly description that creates a dominant impression through carefully organized details.

In this study group, you will

- ◆ learn how to employ the five senses, show instead of tell, avoid clichés, and use personification, oxymoron, similes, and metaphors
- ◆ review organizational strategies
- ◆ practice writing a descriptive paragraph

Writing Center study groups may be counted towards required supplemental learning hours for English 550, 450, and 1A. Call (909) 652-6821 or come in today to make an appointment! For other study groups or the study group schedule, go to <http://www.chaffey.edu/writingctr/studygroups.shtml>.
